

Warner L. McGee, MPH

Warner L. McGee is an ORISE fellow at the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention. He obtained his BA in Psychology from Morehouse College in 2005 and his MPH in Health Education/Health Promotion from Morehouse School of Medicine in 2008. Before entering his Master's program he was a Health Educator at Planned Parenthood of Georgia coordinating an all male youth development program. He is interested in STDs, HIV/AIDS, and substance use among African-American males. After completing his MPH in May 2008, he will attend the University of North Carolina at Greensboro to pursue a Doctorate of Public Health in Community Health Education. His long term plans are to open a male focused health center in an effort to reduce the STD/HIV disparity among minority males.
